EXPLANATORY NOTE

In 1977, Presidential Decree 1246 conferred an "absolute cloak of confidentiality" over foreign currency deposits and exempted them from "attachment, garnishment, or any other order or process of any court, legislative body, government agency or any administrative body" to "better encourage the inflow of foreign currency deposits" into Philippine banks that could channel these funds into loans and investments, and thereby contribute to the country's economic development.

Subsequent developments have rendered obsolete these special protections provided by law to foreign currency deposits. While there may have been a relative scarcity of foreign currency in the domestic banking and financial system in the 1970s, this is clearly no longer the case today. Remittances by Overseas Filipino Workers, totaling over US$ 18.3 billion in the first 11 months of 2011, on top of traditional sources of foreign currency, ensure that the country's foreign exchange reserves are at an all-time high.

Furthermore, recent events have shown how the absolute and unqualified secrecy of foreign currency deposits, and their exemption from government orders or processes, may be exploited to cloak financial transactions by individuals and entities involved in illegal activities. For instance, government officials, including those conferred with immunity from suit during their incumbency and removable only through impeachment, may make use of foreign currency deposits to amass ill-gotten wealth with the assurance that these will be virtually beyond the reach of the State.

This bill proposes amendments to Republic Act 6426, or the Foreign Currency Deposit Act of the Philippines, that, while maintaining the secrecy and confidentiality of foreign currency deposits, allows their examination in certain exceptional cases, such as impeachment, or upon the order of a competent court. In addition, it proposes that their exemption from governmental orders or processes be removed. If this bill is enacted into law, foreign currency deposits will, in these respects, enjoy the same level of protection as deposits in the national currency.
